A vibrant, painterly illustration of a jungle scene. Large, broad green leaves with prominent veins dominate the foreground and middle ground. In the background, a thick tree trunk is visible, surrounded by more foliage. The lighting is dappled, creating a sense of a sunlit forest floor.

MANY strange legends are told of the jungles of far-off India. They speak of Bagheera the black panther, of Baloo the bear. They tell of Kaa the sly python, and of the Lord of the Jungle, the great tiger, Shere Khan. But of all the legends none is so strange as the story of a small boy named Mowgli.

An illustration on the left side of the page depicts a white wolf standing on a small patch of ground, looking towards the right. Behind it are three smaller white wolf cubs, also looking in the same direction. The background is a dark, dense jungle with green foliage and a large, dark, leafy plant in the foreground. The style is that of a classic children's book illustration.

The story began when a child, left all alone in the jungle, was found by Bagheera the panther. He could not give the small, helpless "man-cub" care and nourishment, so Bagheera took him to the den of a wolf family with young cubs of their own.

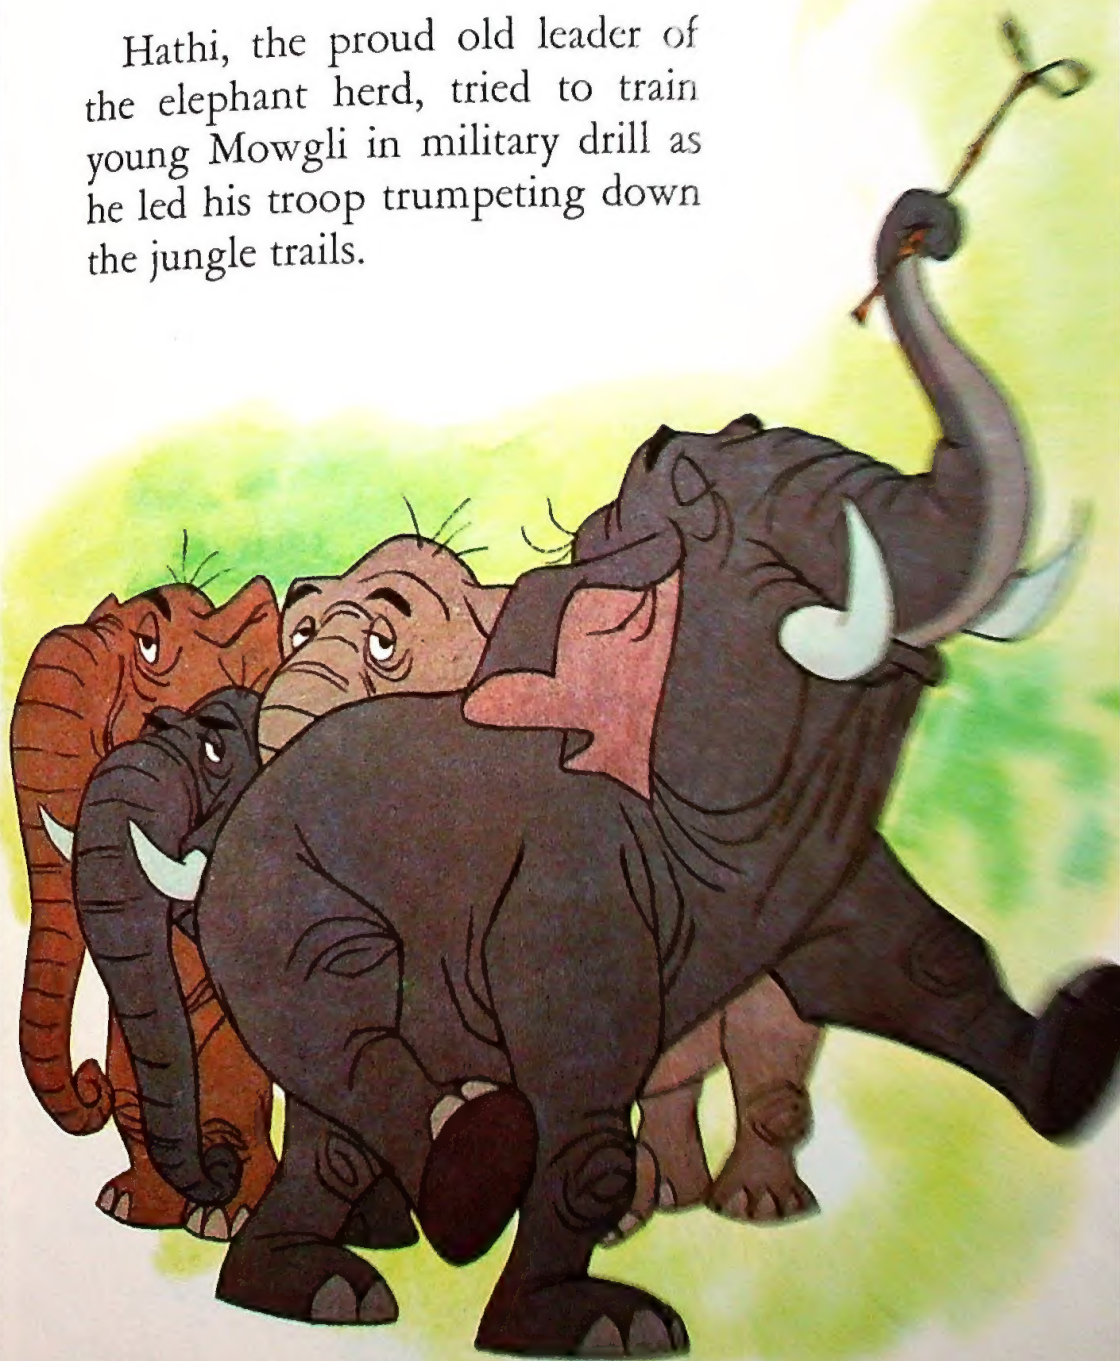

That is how it happened that Mowgli, as the man-cub came to be called, was raised among the wolves. All the jungle folk were his friends.

Bagheera took Mowgli on long walks and taught him jungle lore.

Baloo, the bumbling bear, played games with Mowgli and taught him to live a life of ease. There were coconuts for the cracking, bananas for the peeling, sweet and juicy pawpaws to pick from jungle trees.

Hathi, the proud old leader of the elephant herd, tried to train young Mowgli in military drill as he led his troop trumpeting down the jungle trails.

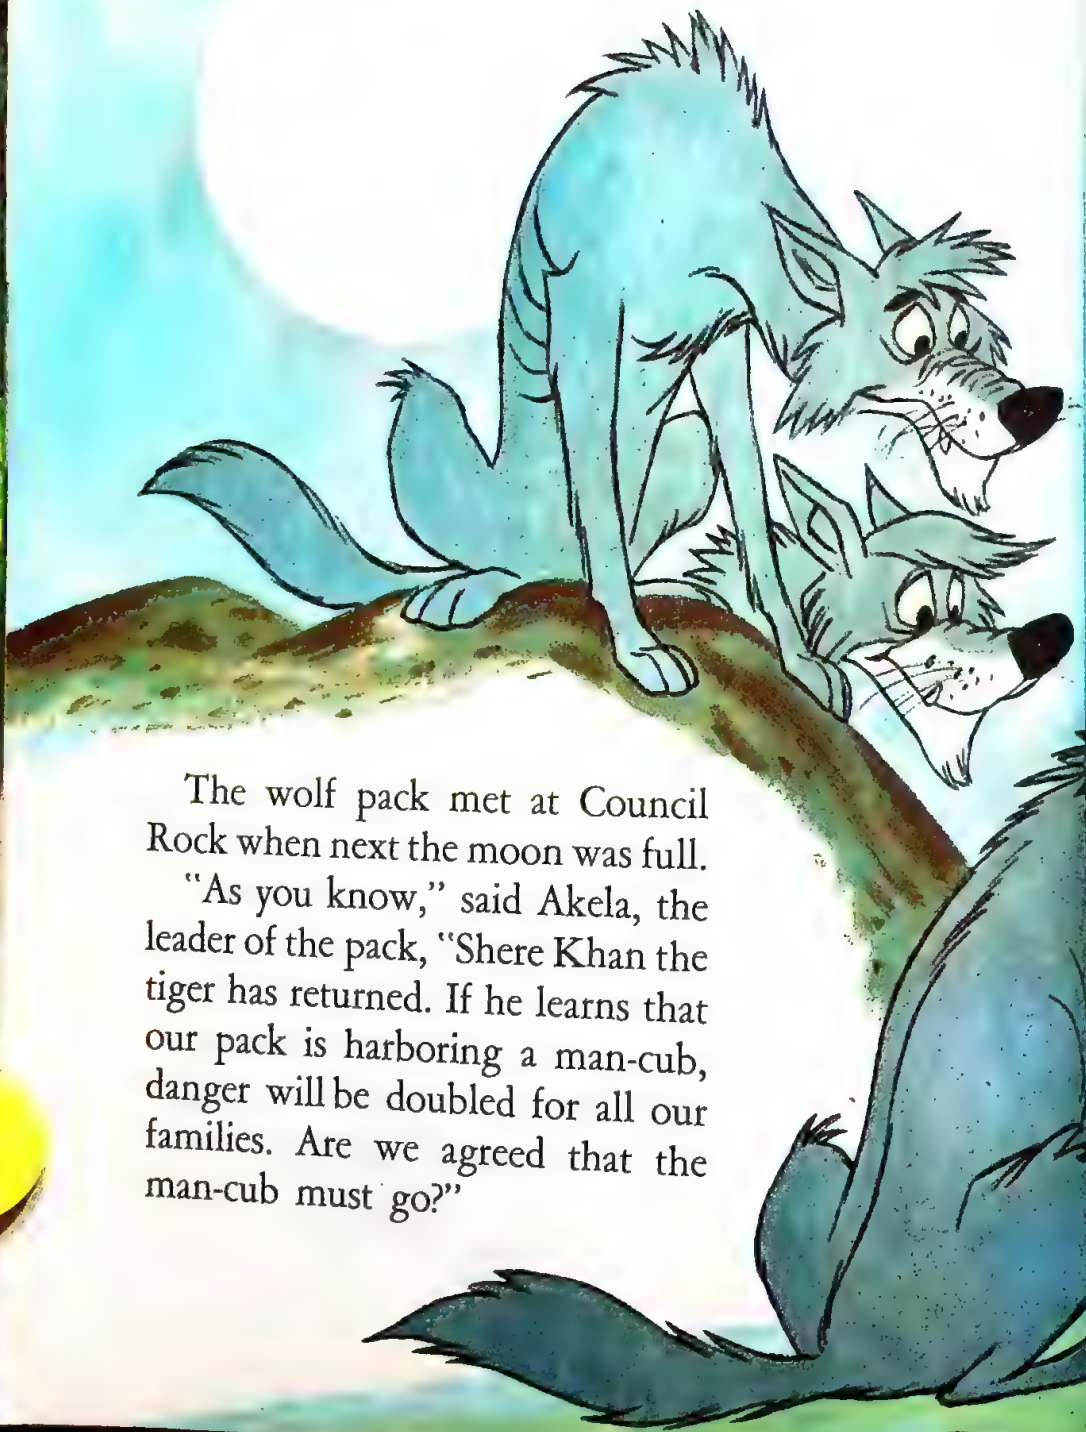

Sly old Kaa the python would have loved to squeeze Mowgli tight in his coils. But Mowgli's friends warned him against Kaa.

It was Shere Khan the tiger who was the real danger to Mowgli. That was because Shere Khan, like all tigers, had a hatred of man.

Ten times the season of rains had come to the jungle while Mowgli made his home with the wolf family. Then Shere Khan returned to the wolves' hunting grounds.

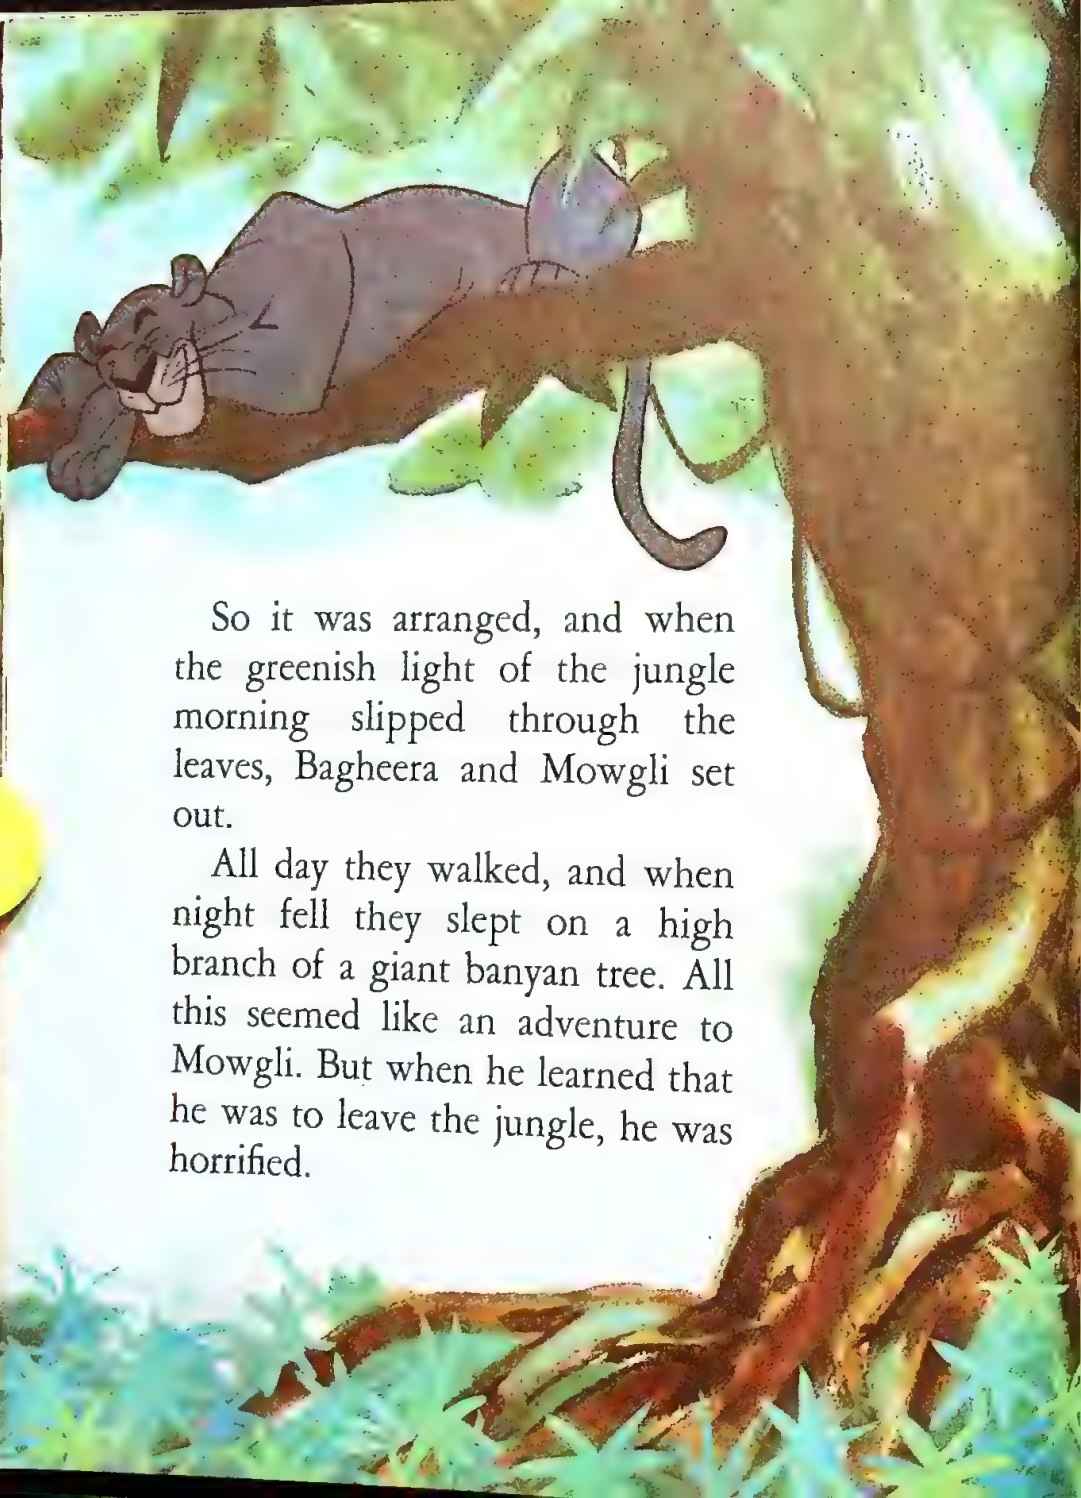

The wolf pack met at Council Rock when next the moon was full.

"As you know," said Akela, the leader of the pack, "Shere Khan the tiger has returned. If he learns that our pack is harboring a man-cub, danger will be doubled for all our families. Are we agreed that the man-cub must go?"

Out from the shadows stepped Bagheera the panther.

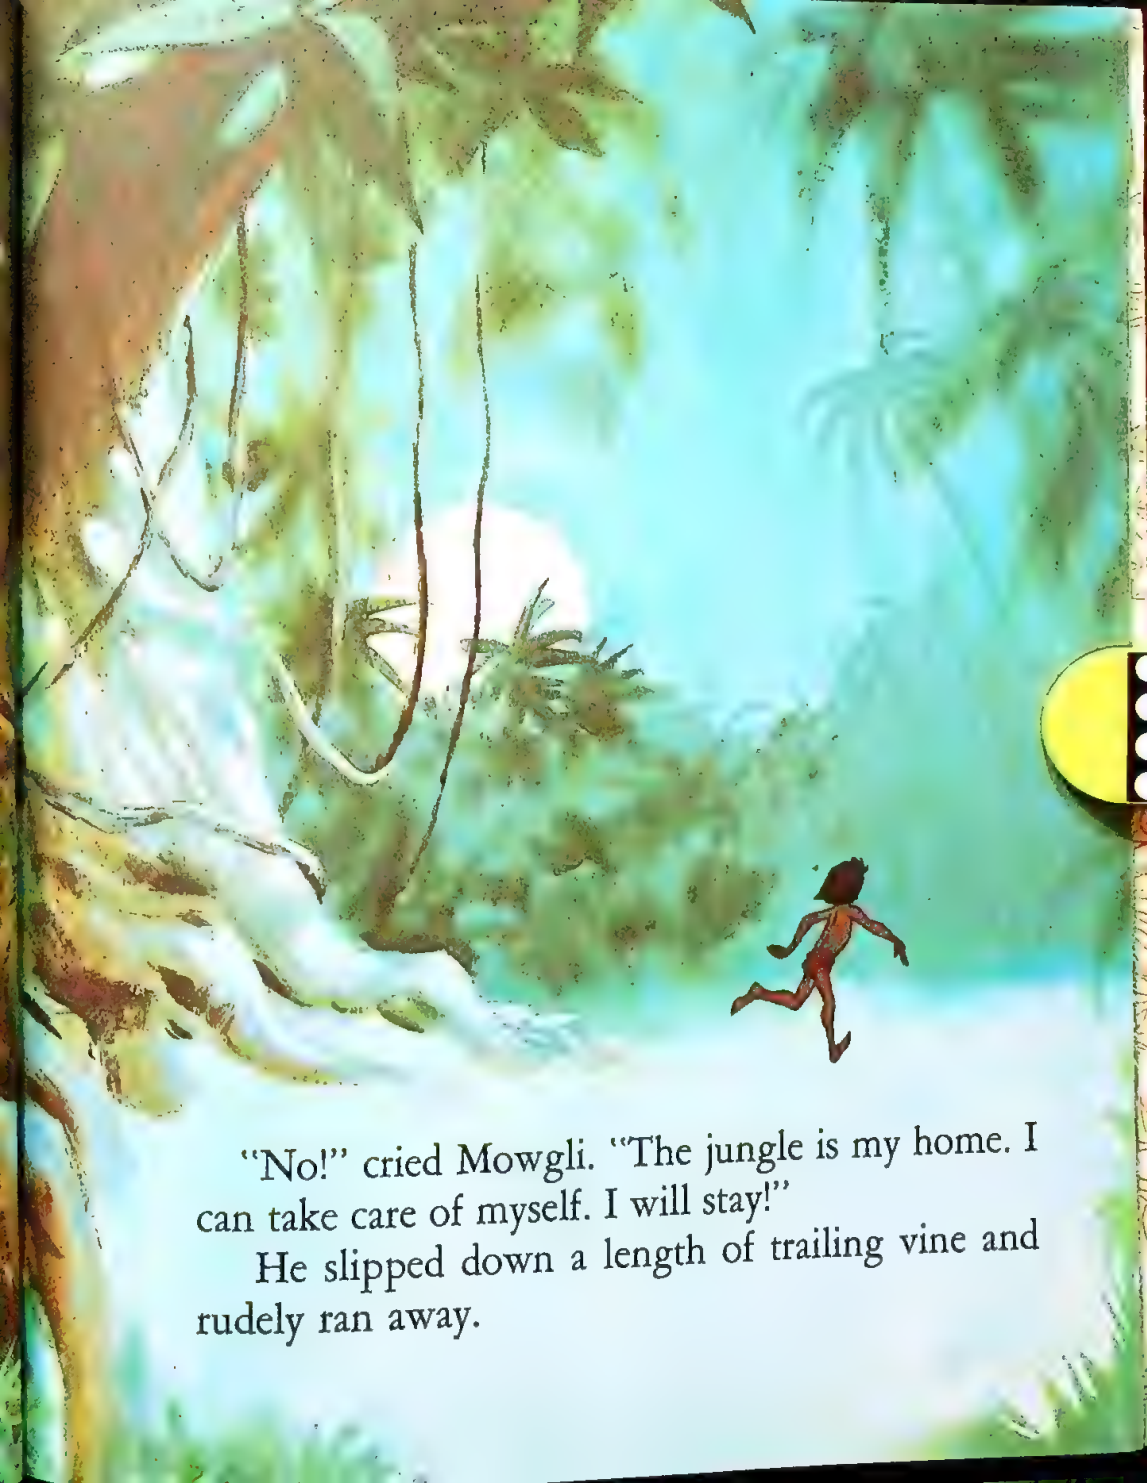

"I brought the man-cub to the pack," he said. "It is my duty to see him safely out of the jungle. I know a man-village not far away where he will be well cared for."

So it was arranged, and when the greenish light of the jungle morning slipped through the leaves, Bagheera and Mowgli set out.

All day they walked, and when night fell they slept on a high branch of a giant banyan tree. All this seemed like an adventure to Mowgli. But when he learned that he was to leave the jungle, he was horrified.

"No!" cried Mowgli. "The jungle is my home. I can take care of myself. I will stay!"

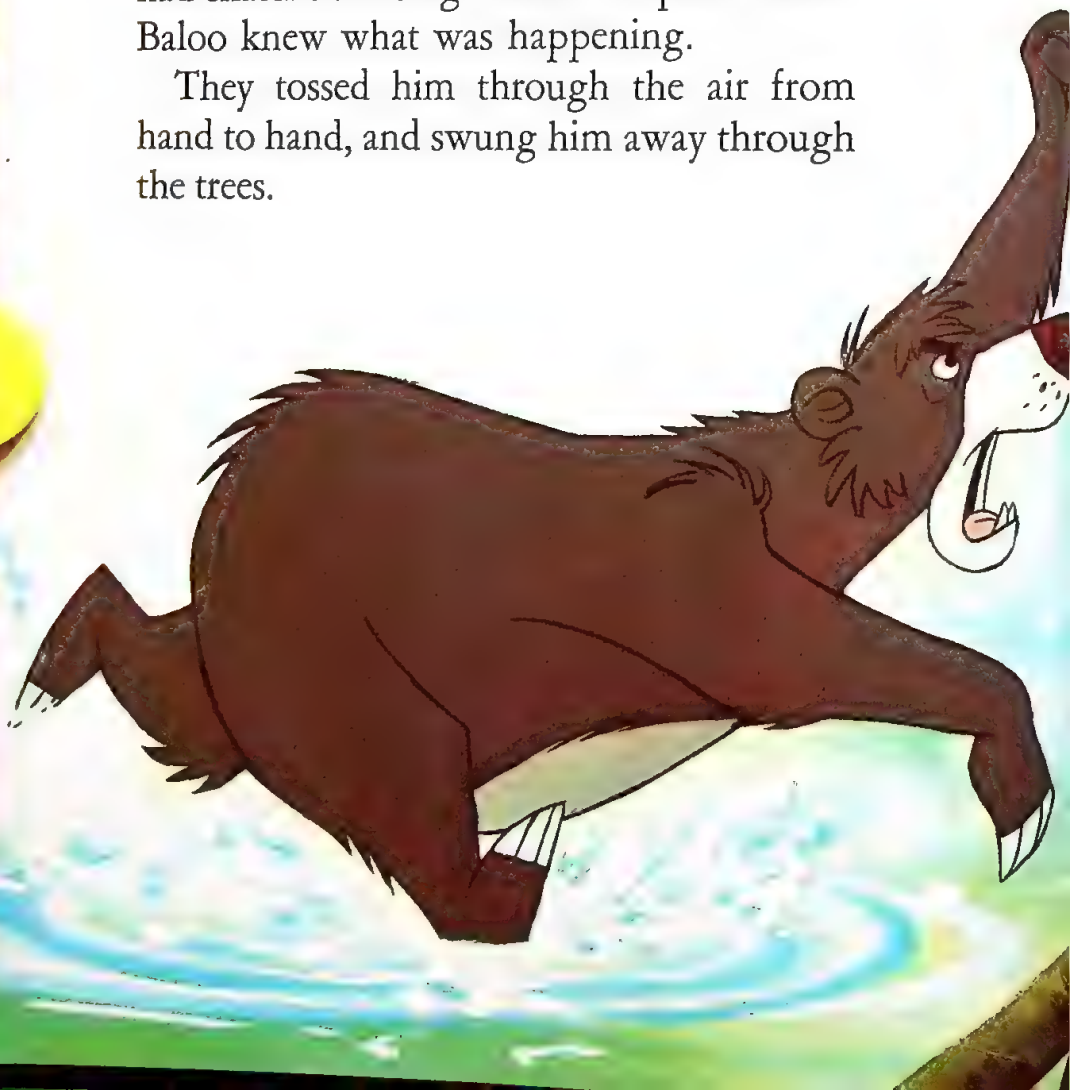

He slipped down a length of trailing vine and rudely ran away.

For a while Mowgli marched with Hathi and the elephants. But he soon tired of that.

Then he found Baloo bathing in a jungle pool. Mowgli joined him for a dip.

Suddenly down swooped the monkey folk, the noisy, foolish Bandar-log. They had snatched Mowgli from the pool before Baloo knew what was happening.

They tossed him through the air from hand to hand, and swung him away through the trees.

Off in the jungle, Bagheera heard Mowgli's cry and came with a leap and a bound.

"The monkeys have stolen Mowgli away!" gasped Baloo.

Off raced Bagheera and Baloo to the ruined city where the monkeys made their home.

They found Mowgli a prisoner of the monkey king.

"Teach me the secret of fire," the monkey king ordered Mowgli. "The magic of fire will frighten even Shere Khan. With it I shall be the equal of men. Until I know the secret, you are my prisoner."

It took quite a fight for Bagheera and Baloo to rescue Mowgli that time!

"Now you see," they told him, "why you must go to the man-village to be safe."

But alas, that foolish boy would not understand. He kicked up his heels and ran away again.

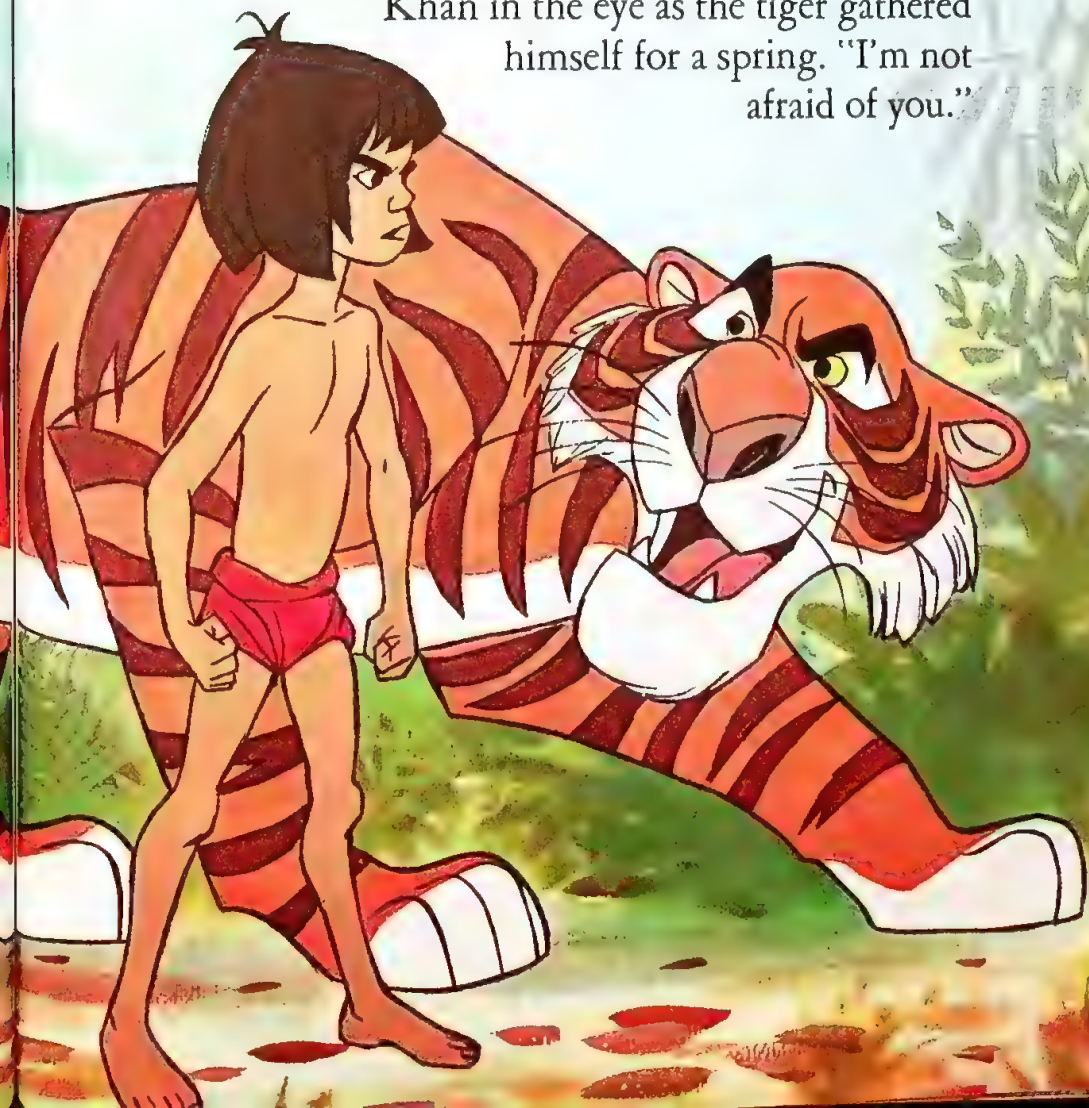

This time his wanderings led him to where Shere Khan lay waiting in the high grass, smiling a hungry smile.

When Mowgli caught sight of the tiger, Shere Khan asked, "Well, man-cub, aren't you going to run?"

But Mowgli did not have the wisdom to be afraid.

"Why should I run?" he asked, staring Shere Khan in the eye as the tiger gathered himself for a spring. "I'm not afraid of you."

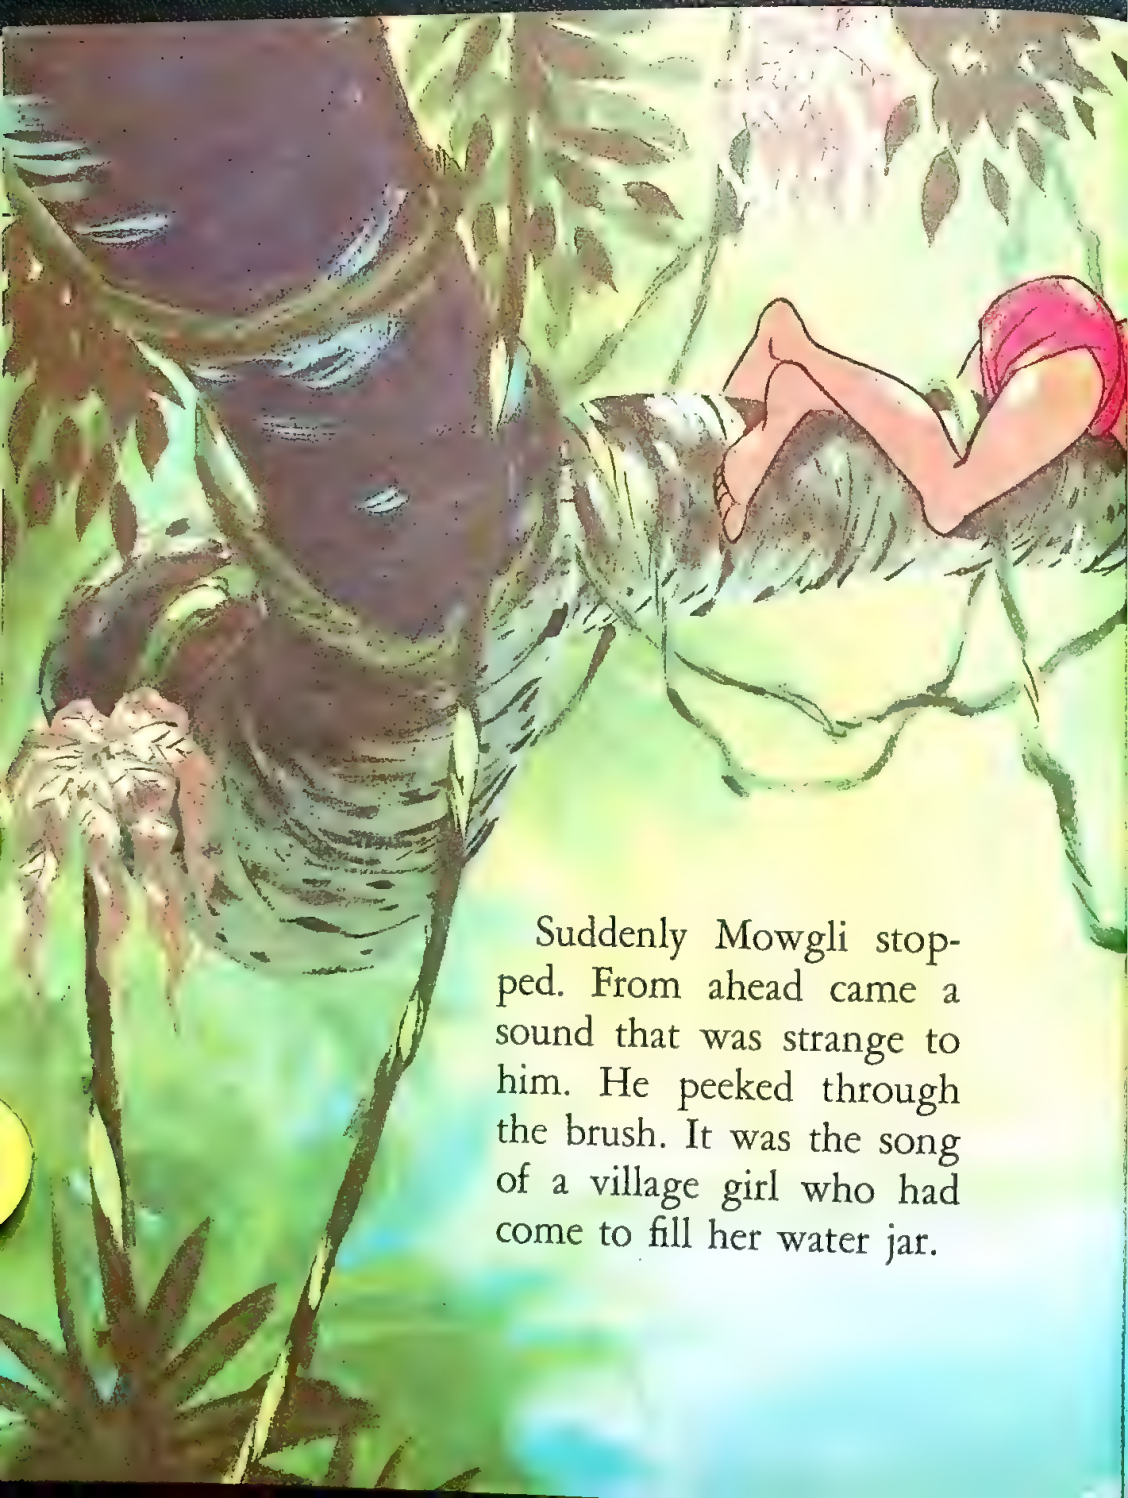

"That foolish boy!" growled Bagheera, who had crept close just in time to hear Mowgli.

Both Bagheera and Baloo flung themselves upon the Lord of the Jungle, to save Mowgli once more.

They were brave and strong, but the tiger was mighty of tooth and claw.

There was a flash of lightning and a dead tree nearby caught fire. Mowgli snatched a burning branch and waved it in Shere Khan's face. The tiger, terrified, ran away. Mowgli was very pleased with himself as he strutted between the two weary warriors, Bagheera and Baloo.

Suddenly Mowgli stopped. From ahead came a sound that was strange to him. He peeked through the brush. It was the song of a village girl who had come to fill her water jar.

As he listened to the soft notes of her song, Mowgli felt strange inside. He felt that he must follow her. Mowgli crept up the path to the village, following the girl and her song.

Baloo and Bagheera watched the small figure as long as it could be seen. When Mowgli vanished inside the village gate, Bagheera sighed a deep sigh.

"It is just as it should be, Baloo," he said. "Our Mowgli is safe in the man-village at last. He has found his true home."

MORE THAN one billion Golden Books have gone into the homes of children of all nations. They are far and away the best-known series of books for young people ever published.

The subjects of Golden Books are chosen to entertain and delight children. Many of them are about the young child's own environment, giving him a feeling of belonging. Others begin to acquaint the child with the lives of people around him and extend his awareness of the world.

Although their gay and colorful appearance does not always immediately show it, a number of Golden Books are packed with information. And behind the amusing stories in many of them is the serious purpose of helping the child prepare for difficult adjustments.

The Golden Books include versions of modern children's classics told for young listeners and, of course, a good share of the beloved fairy and folk tales.

So look closely at the Golden Books you choose for they have many imitators. You will find a listing of some of the books in the Little Golden Library on the reverse of this cover.
